

2.2.3. Security trends

Following almost daily hostilities during the civil war, Idlib started to experience a ‘period of calm’^{543} and relative stability as of March 2025.^{544} Nevertheless, during the reference period of this report, armed clashes erupted between Firqat al-Ghuraba and forces of the Syrian Transitional Government on 21 and 22 October 2025.^{545} On 23 October, Uzbek foreign fighters arrived in support of Firqat al-Ghuraba,^{546} resulting in a ‘multi-faction battle’.^{547} A ceasefire was negotiated between the militants and government forces,^{548} which reportedly allowed Mol forces to enter the camp.^{549} Other confrontations involving Uzbek militants occurred at the beginning of May 2026.^{550} Syrian authorities arrested 16 Uzbek fighters in Idlib^{551} after a raid on a robbery suspect’s home^{552} triggered an armed stand-off at a Criminal Security headquarters. ^{553} According to sources, the integration of foreign fighters into the new Syrian security forces ‘entails risks,’^{554} and there are growing tensions regarding loyalties and autonomy.^{555}

Idlib city as well as Idlib countryside experienced an escalation of ISIL operations in late 2025. ^{556} On 1 December 2025, the Mol reported of two operations in the north of the governorate and in the west of Idlib city which targeted cells affiliated with ISIL.^{557} On 16 December, Syrian forces dismantled another ISIL cell, which was associated with a series of attacks targeting security and military patrols in northwestern Syria^{558} since November 2025.^{559} Furthermore, many of the roughly 6 000 foreigners with links to ISIL who were previously held in al-Hol camp reportedly travelled to Idlib and Aleppo after control of the camp was taken over by the Syrian government from SDF forces in January 2026, sparking security concerns.^{560} In March 2026, two ISIL attacks were reported in Idlib.^{561}

After several years in the role of a ‘protective power’ for the Idlib governorate – preventing Assad’s forces from retaking the area from the HTS –^{562} Türkiye’s focus shifted away from Idlib, which had come to hold less strategic significance, towards northern Aleppo and the Kurdish conflict.^{563}
